MASTER OF SCIENCE IN FINANCE

Gain the leading-edge knowledge and skills necessary to succeed in today's complex world of finance

The Master of Science in Finance equips students with in-depth knowledge of the functions of finance. Students learn how to use the functions of finance to create and maximize value in commercial companies and societies. They are equipped with current knowledge and techniques that are required for undertaking the functions of finance with effectiveness, efficiency, and professional standards. They also develop and promote strategic financial management skills and capabilities for professional success.

Students will be able to apply advanced skills including modern portfolio theory, for capital allocation decisions, evaluate financial performances of corporations and investment portfolios, understand international financial markets and the use, pricing, carry out valuation and structuring of financial products, and identify and resolve complex business problems through the application of specialized financial knowledge.

Professional Outcomes

The program prepares graduates for management positions in banking, investment and asset management or a finance function in public and private-sector organizations. The degree is valuable to those individuals who are seeking certification as a Chartered Financial Analyst (CFA), Certified Financial Risk Manager (CFRM) or Certified Financial Manager (CFM).
